The best way to learn Photoshop is to jump straight into the editor. You can explore every tool and learn the settings inside the programs yourself without depending on a tutorial. If you're already familiar with Photoshop, or another image editing software, this tutorial can teach you the basics of Photoshop Elements. We'll take you through the most important steps in designing and creating images; composition, lighting and color. Of course, we'll also give you the knowledge to create your own designs, just like the pros. You can also follow the steps in the tutorial to create amazing websites and graphics. Contents The key to any image is good composition. This is the relationship between the visual elements in the image, how they are put together to make a good picture. Composition = the design of an image. A good composition starts with a good subject and a good camera. The subject must be interesting. If your subject is boring, you're in trouble. When you take a photo, you have a limited amount of time in front of the subject. If you're not fast enough, you won't get a good shot. Top tips: When photographing a large scene: Make sure your lens is open wide. How do you feel when you're about to photograph something? If you're excited, you'll want to photograph it as soon as possible. (That's why photographers use fast DSLRs.) Walk around your scene before the big moment. Walk into the scene and see it from different angles. It's hard to do when you're in the middle of it. How to learn photography: When you're out somewhere with your camera, try your best to get a good photograph. How do you feel when you take a photo? How do you feel when your friends look at the photo? If you don't understand these questions, you're not ready to photograph. Here are some exercises that can help: Set a timer to take 1 or 2 minutes of self-portraits. Use your phone's timer. Try taking photos from different angles and see what you can find. Try snapping a photo of your palm while it's held up to your face. Try taking a photo of a 05a79cecff
