Features: FIFA 20 and FIFA 21 introduced a new player movement system, which has been scaled down significantly and now features fewer animations for quicker and smoother transitions. This has also meant that more control is now possible in a higher proportion of areas of the field. Bigger teams now feature more intricate and intricate player movement, with more precise and nuanced changes of direction and acceleration. The ball is no longer hidden when the ball carrier is taking a longer stride, for example, and will react more naturally to the tiniest shift of momentum. When dribbling, the ball now follows the player's every move, making it easier to evade a challenge and to take a defender on. The goalkeeper has a more nuanced reaction to the ball, improving his ability to read the flight of the ball and anticipate where it will end up. When challenging for the ball, the AI opponent now makes subtle adjustments to play a simple but effective defensive pattern of passing and positioning. When running with the ball, players now make smart, evasive moves and dribble while maintaining their balance. Defenders are not as predictable and will make more unpredictable but exciting runs to support a passing attack. They can still make clever and precise runs as if they are part of a one-on-one situation, but they now do so much more often. In the final third of the field, passing lanes and the behavior of defenders have been adjusted. All of the following refinements were made in the online version of the demo that all consoles can play: AI opponents on the pitch now make better decisions based on the situations around them. The performance of the ball in the air has been improved, making it easier to combine and pass it above your teammates. There is more variety in the behavior of the opponents in the final third of the field when defending. When passing the ball, the AI now makes the player more aware of where his teammates are moving to create easier team combinations. Thanks to new hit detection and physics, the ball now rebounds more realistically from a greater variety of surfaces. There is more variation in the pace and style of plays. On one side, pressure is also applied more intelligently, making the pitch more compact in the final third. The stamina model has been updated and now affects the way players recover after making a run

Championship: Fnatic vs. eUnited Fnatic vs. eUnited — As we head into the final weekend of the North American Championship, one team makes an improbable run, while another falls on their sword. Fnatic — Despite losses to Astralis in the earlier rounds, Fnatic took control in the final match against Team Envy. Ignition secured wins on Nuke and Inferno, giving Fnatic the 4-1 victories they needed to edge out the North American Championship victor, EnvyUs. Fnatic will advance to the semifinal and face a potential rematch against Cloud 9 for the NA Championship.

On the other hand, eUnited were completely outclassed against Team Liquid — the team that knocked them out in the group stage. After opening up with a strong win on Mirage, Liquid pulled out four straight wins on Cache, Nuke, Inferno and Overpass. eUnited didn't show up until the final match of the semifinal group, where they could only manage a 0-3 loss to Liquid. In the final match of the week, Fnatic will be looking to extend their streak against Envy, while Liquid will be desperate to end bc9d6d6daa
