How can I make the title appear longer? A: You should use and inside the . You can remove all of and (or only , it's up to you). If you need one more column for something else, use (two column), and use or for a single table row. The premises of the B.C. Securities Commission in Victoria have grown to encompass a warehouse in Burnaby, a building in Vancouver and an office on Vancouver Island. But the commission’s main location — a five-storey edifice in a downtown Vancouver building on West Hastings Street — is among the least used buildings in the city. Most of the agency’s staff are based in the central office in the city, and they have a large contingent at the B.C. Court of Appeal. The commissioners work out of the Victoria building when they’re in town. article continues below That arrangement will change if the B.C. government proceeds with a plan to create a public inquiry into the commission, expected to be finalized in the next few weeks. The government, led by Premier John Horgan’s New Democrats, has proposed to create the inquiry by combining the B.C. Securities Commission with the Office of the Market Regulator of British Columbia. At the B.C. Securities Commission’s ratepayer hearings last week, the commissioners heard from witnesses who urged the government not to create the inquiry. The commission’s former chair, Cynthia Kosh, and New Democrat MLA Lana Popham asked Horgan not to ram through a review of the agency. “The model for the inquiry process is the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls,” Kosh told the gathering. “There was community consultation, there was a call for submissions, there was consensus among the commissioners that a public inquiry is the right way to do this.” Scott McNicoll, a former RCMP officer, was appointed by the government to lead the inquiry. He has not been able to share the preliminary findings of his review yet. He’s spent the past four months quietly conducting interviews, he said, and was waiting to see how the commission came out to determine how many public hearings to hold. He will be reporting his
