Aldosterone/renin ratio (ARR) >15 is considered diagnostic of primary aldosteronism (PA) and a subsequent step-up approach should aim for sub-type diagnosis. We review the current understanding of the potential utility of the marinobufagenin (MBG) model of PA (MBG > or =4 microg/L), which is based on the assumption that urinary MBG is a valid surrogate of aldosterone secretion. MBG > or =4 microg/L provides a specificity of 100% for PA and 98.8% specificity for sub-type diagnosis, with lower sensitivity, ranging from 26.7% in CT proven lateralization positive patients to 75% in cases of primary hyperaldosteronism. The combination of a negative ARR and MBG > or =4 microg/L results in a specificity of 97.5% (95% confidence interval 95.1-99.1%) for PA. MBG > or =4 microg/L also has a low positive predictive value for PA (66.7%, 95% confidence interval 50.1-81.5%) and a high negative predictive value (100%, 95% confidence interval 98.9-100%). The MBG model has many advantages over the aldosterone/plasma renin activity (PRA) ratio, but is associated with some limitations. MBG > or =4 microg/L occurs in 3.4% of patients with well-defined essential hypertension but does not occur in other forms of secondary hypertension. The correlation between urinary MBG and plasma aldosterone is weak (r2 0.24) and there is a poor correlation between urinary MBG and plasma aldosterone (r2 0.24 595f342e71
