What's New in the Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.0.2)?

Q: Limitations of Bigquery Select and APPROX The BigQuery Select api is great when it comes to accessing data, it's fast, flexible and scalable. What I can't wrap my head around is the limits of this query/API and how they will impact an application that makes heavy use of the API. Simple example: `SELECT * FROM `someTable` WHERE ip IN (SELECT ip FROM `someOtherTable`) AND (SELECT abs(network_latency_ms) FROM `someOtherTable`) > `someVariable` LIMIT 10` The performance of this query is good, but I don't understand the specifics behind the rows and columns that it returns. For example, the use of a subquery generates a temporary table which then gets used in the main query. Does the temporary table contain columns with auto-generated values with data about the row in the table? Or is it a completely separate structure? Or are the columns in the temporary table just like the columns on the table in the given alias? A: `SELECT * FROM `someTable` WHERE ip IN (SELECT ip FROM `someOtherTable`) AND (SELECT abs(network_latency_ms) FROM `someOtherTable`) > `someVariable` LIMIT 10` This query could be transformed as below `SELECT * FROM `someTable` WHERE ip IN (SELECT ip FROM `someOtherTable` WHERE network_latency_ms > `someVariable`) AND (SELECT abs(network_latency_ms) FROM `someOtherTable` WHERE ip IN (SELECT ip FROM `someTable`)) LIMIT 10` However, there are some limitations of the BigQuery Query API. Bigquery uses a GAE backend. The API is optimized for rather large datasets. This is an advantage if your data is somewhat static. However, if you intend to iterate over your data, you might want to consider using BigQuery's Streaming
