125.NEW YORK — A day after a South Carolina man was killed on-duty in their civilian employer, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the South Carolina Law Enforcement Division are working together to see if any federal charges could be laid for the tragic events that unfolded July 17. “Though every day begins with a new chapter, we always know that some days will have a deeper impact than others,” Robert Smith, the FBI’s Southern region field office director, wrote in a statement Friday.

“Our thoughts and prayers remain with the family and friends of Mr. Bishop and we wish them and the responding officers peace and healing during this difficult time. In the days to come, we will work with the Law Enforcement Division of South Carolina to review the investigative findings and determine the appropriate path forward.” The FBI began investigating the incident shortly after the death of their South Carolina state trooper, Heath Bussey. Hours earlier, two people were killed, and 20 others, including 17-year-old Joseph Daniel Davis, were injured in a four-car crash involving the trooper’s car and another. Bussey’s car plowed into a bus loaded with schoolchildren on U.S. 601, a busy highway that runs south of Columbia. The two people in the other car, a Hyundai Elantra, also died. Their identities have not yet been released, pending notification of their families. The three people in Bussey's car — Davis, Bussey and the girl he was dating, were all taken to a
