a few suggestions: get outside. just getting out there and exploring is great. see if your local park offers a program for kids play outside! make it a game and challenge each other, read about and watch nature documentaries read a book. make up a game and play it outside make or find a nature based toy (like the big dig) go to a zoo or aquarium you rang (thats a lurch reference for the uninitiated.) i also have a built-in skepticism reflex when it comes to rebooting or remaking treasured shows from my tv youthim in the camp that wishes theyd left lost in space alone (though now that the robinsons actually are finally lost in space for season 2, maybe it will improve). that said (while twitching my nose in hopes that abc thinks revisiting bewitched), youre speaking my language with this addams family love, i had one of those thing coin banks as a kid, and couldnt get enough of this show during its short run. it has proved a very durable franchise, both at the movies in the 1990s and even as a broadway musical in more recent times, so this high concept probably could fly again, especially if cast properly and given appropriate production values. (theyll never match the creaky, shabby charm of the black-and-white original, and probably shouldnt try.) im not saying im dying for this to happenim putting most of my hopes in jordan peeles new version of the twilight zone for cbs all accessbut i expect id greet it with as open a mind as possible.
