i have an adult burrowing owl which has taken up residence on my front porch. he/she has been staying on my porch or in the adjacent low trees during the day for about 3 weeks now. he/she leaves at night, presumably to hunt i am concerned that the owl seems so isolated. apart from being alone, it appears to be in excellent physical condition. there has been a lot of construction nearby, so it might have had its burrow disrupted. there are also many protected burrowing sites very close by, so relocation would not seem difficult for it to manage on its own. i know i am not supposed to make a pet of this owl, but we love having it as a guest. can i do anything for him/her to improve his happiness the goal of this event is to help foster the writing and publication skills of students enrolled in crs' 2-year programs in culinary arts, bilingual education, elementary education and family and consumer sciences. tasks will cover elements of event planning, computer graphic design, photography, and social media. students will engage in a dialogue with faculty and work directly with featured chefs to plan events that are meaningful to students and make connections with local consumers and the community. creative writing assignments will be developed based on the ideas and inspiration of the featured chefs. additionally, students will be encouraged to make connections to their own community through their written work. get the full story as you travel to one of the nation's most beautiful and mysterious destinations. from appalachia to the pacific northwest, from the east coast to the rocky mountains, from alaska to arizona, we will cover thousands of miles of scenic byways to visit ten of the best spots to see fireflies in america.

i think that i have an idea. if the owls need a perch, an appropriately sized perch, maybe 12" wide by 24" long (1ft x 2ft), big enough for the owls to be comfortable, but not so big that they can't get away, also with a metal stud (a piece of pipe will work as well) attached to it by nails, or any fasteners, with a cord, or rope, attached to it, just to make it seem like a much more permanent fixture. then paint it with a bit of an earth color and see if it attracts him. it should be out of reach, maybe above a door sill, or somewhere with a clear view out of a door. if you make the spot it's perching in more interesting with plants, etc, you might be able to lure him into it more often. hi. fyi, the sunrise fire beetle (a relative of staphylinidae) can be confused with a champion (a relative of tenebrionidae), but the champion can be distinguished from the sunrise by its three or four spines on the last ventral appendage, and the overall body shape is generally squarer. usually the sunrise are up to 6 inches long while champions are usually larger. another distinguishable character is the horn of a champion beetle is usually lacking on the sunrise. you might be able to find a picture of a sunrise in a book or online, if not google to see what it looks like!-karla i have three differently colored dragon's eggs.it has been sitting on a shelf for years, when i found it the turtle had put her head in it. i closed it back up. she doesn't seem to be interested in them. should i keep them? is she trying to breed, i thought she was just sitting on them. he bought the land next door, and has had an owl box built all the way up to the door! i asked him to put the owl in before the house was built, and to keep the grass long. but the bird seems to have no fear of humans. is this normal for him? i was so scared when he came home with a dead robin, thinking that he had hurt it, i didn't know whether to call the
