Do not install the Crack nor the serial key directly. by Jeff E A couple years ago, I found out my mother was dying of cancer. It was discovered in October of 2009 and became metastasized into her liver in January of 2010. She was put on chemo in January of 2010 and finished in March of 2010. She's been cancer-free since. That's about 7 months ago. She's been on maintenance-level chemo since she finished in March of 2010 and now needs to begin daily pills, also. I found out at the beginning of this month when the drugs started. I got told on the phone while I was at work. After a moment of reflection, I decided to wait until she was home before I broke the news to her. I had waited this long to hear. It was a difficult phone call. I was not prepared for the emotions I would feel. I am a happy and optimistic person but when my mom needed me, I could not always be so. After spending a few days laying in bed with her after the phone call and trying to make her a late-season Girl Scout cookie, I was ready to go on with my life. The 6th of this month was the first time in a while I was really alone. So I tried. I tried to live. I tried to enjoy things. I tried to do things for myself. But it became so easy to forget how I've lived, what I've done, and who I've been without her. The pill that she is now on has taken most of the edge off my discomfort. I'm not sure if it's her medication or if it is me. I'm just so grateful to God and her for bringing her back from the brink. I am finding my way back to myself now
